

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Research and training design by:

Mandy Bonisteel, Marilyn Oladimeji and Jude Fairweather

Further consultation and input provided by:

Jacquie Carr

Diane Dupont

Suzanne Farinha

Mike Gobeil

Yasmin Hussain

Alison Konrad

Marianne Park

Harold Sahadeo

Elizabeth Simpson

Brand Identity and Strategic Communications provided by:

The Aspect Group

Initial Development Funding provided by:

The Ontario Government through the Ontario Women's Directorate

In developing this training we have drawn on research and personal experience. We are indebted to those who have carefully investigated and documented relational workplace dynamics and to those who have written about diversity and equity in the workplace.

Through Dr. Sandy Welsh's qualitative work with community researchers we learned about challenges facing women in non-relational workplaces. We have relied on Dr. Joyce Fletcher's seminal work, documented in her book Disappearing Acts (MIT Press, 2001) to understand relationality and to construct practical applications for it in this training. Dr. Alison Konrad from the Ivey School of Business is the Principal Investigator in a partnership to develop a tool to measure relational practice. Ms. Catherine Burr and Dr. Yasmin Jiwani helped us to appreciate the importance of using an intersectional approach to understand diversity.

We are equally grateful to those who have shared their stories of personal struggles with workplace relationships. We have drawn upon both their successes and their disappointments as we have shaped these materials.

It has been an honour to be part of an initiative that has been touched by so many deeply inquiring minds, so many deeply compassionate human beings and so many visionary thinkers.

Barb MacQuarrie

For the Centre for Research and Education on Violence Against Women and Children